On Fedhealth Benefits

Mental Health Programmes

The statistics are concerning: 30% of South Africans will suffer from a mental health condition in their lifetime, and 76 to 85% of people in low- and medium-income countries with severe mental disorders receive no treatment. To help address mental health issues amongst its members, Fedhealth offers two programmes: the Mental Health Programme, and the Mental Wellbeing Programme.

Mental Health Programme

Mental health can be seen as the centre of all health, characterised by integral relationships with a person's physical, social, workplace and financial wellbeing.

Fedhealth's Mental Health Programme, available to qualifying members who have been diagnosed with mental health conditions including depression and bipolar disorder, uses innovative solutions for member empowerment, and relies on social, family and workplace support.

It promotes:

- Greater reduction in mental health symptoms
- Greater rates of care for mental health
- Improvement in quality of life
- Less functional impairment
- Better patient satisfaction
- Better provider satisfaction
- Lower total healthcare costs in the medium- and long-term
- Significant benefits in terms of absenteeism reduction

Adherence to and active participation in treatment is required from patients to achieve desired clinical outcomes. Patient activation and support for self-care are other key components of the model. This is achieved through education of patients and their families, behavioural activation via Care Managers, integration with workplace wellness initiatives, and accessing community support groups.

Any Fedhealth member or beneficiary may enquire whether they qualify for enrolment in the Fedhealth Mental Health Programme. The qualifying beneficiary must contact Fedhealth, as the Scheme needs member consent and involvement for programme enrolment.

The Fedhealth Mental Health Programme also integrates with workplace employee assistance programmes, and establishes a bi-directional referral process between them. Integrated reporting will help measure mental health impact and outcomes, particularly in terms of productivity, which is considered a sensitive measure for mental health interventions.

Mental Wellbeing Programme

Fedhealth's Mental Wellbeing Programme, available to all Fedhealth members and beneficiaries through the Fedhealth Family Room, offers a psychosocial wellbeing service for members that equips them to make the necessary changes to improve their quality of life. The programme will be available from 2018.

This programme offers Fedhealth members:

- Wellbeing communications on relevant and trending psychosocial, financial and legal wellbeing themes to ensure optimal wellbeing and encourage healthy decision-making
- Access to a multi-disciplinary team of wellbeing professionals through Fedhealth hosted webinars and social media engagements including live chats
- Wellbeing information and advice via a dedicated call centre for topics like personal and occupational coaching, trauma, legal wellbeing and financial wellbeing
- Referral to in-person coaching at a reduced rate for Fedhealth members
- Care coordination and management to assist with risk screening to facilitate convenient access to the appropriate service
- Tele-coaching where a personal coach provides immediate, professional tele-coaching on psychosocial, financial and legal issues

The programme will be run by a care centre and will be available 24/7 through various channels such as telephone, email, SMS and a call-back facility.
